DR. HARRY W. ROBBINS

Beneath the seeming New England austerity that is characteristic of Dr. Harry W. Robbins lies a Frostian humour, a gentle understanding of the minds of men, and a scholarly mind rich in literature and in life. During his seventy years, "Robbie" has been a football player and a journeyman printer, an army captain, a high school teacher, and, for the past thirty years, a professor of English. He reads a French or German text or an old Anglo-Saxon manuscript with the same ease with which he attacks a problem in semantics. Those of us who have heard him describe nightingales in an early English dawn believe that he is a poet; those of us who have spoken to him of life and its problems know that he is a philosopher.

Dr. Robbins was graduated from Brown University in 1908, and received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from the University of Minnesota in 1923. He has been chairman of the Bucknell Department of English for thirty years, during which time he has been on numerous important faculty committees, a foundation member and president of the Bucknell chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, and an advisor to Sigma Tau Delta. He is a member of the American Association of University Professors, the Modern Language Association, the Early English Text Society, and Le Societe des Anciens Textes Francais.

Best known as the co-editor of the widely printed Western World Literature, for which he completed several translations, Dr. Robbins has also published Le Miroir de Seinte Eglise, Richard Rolle's 'Devout Meditacioun,' and worked on a translation of The Romance of The Rose.

The rigors of academic duties have never succeeded in hiding the twinkle in his eyes, his almost boyish satisfaction over a good bridge hand, or the dry wit expressed in muted asides. Students who penetrate the Vermont severity discover that "Robbie" is both warm and kind, and that he has a keen awareness and an understanding that can spring only from years of studying, of reading, and of living.

Foreword

Forewords are customarily written to give explanations, and are usually read as a finale to the rest of the book, after the fraternity and sorority pages have been well thumbed, the personality pictures discussed, and the last proof reading error soundly criticized. It is only then that the gentle reader turns to the foreword, to see what the editor has to say by way of excuses.

We have no excuses, no messages, no instructions to cherish this book as a memento of happy days that will be no more, no remarks that 1953 is the dawn of a new era. We merely preface the pages of the L'AGENDA with the comment that it, like all other annuals, has been produced, processed, engraved, and sweated over just for YOU.

YOU are cordially invited to frame and keep for admiration the painting which Bruce Mitchell created for us, as the most typically Bucknell landscape that anyone could select.

YOU are cordially invited to peruse the section containing the pictures of the administrative officials, which contains very little of novelty, for the administration, as the backbone of the university, undergoes little flux and even less commotion.

YOU are cordially invited to glance over the academic section, which contains
THE STORY OF THE THREE BROTHERS
The story of Ab, the first brother
The story of Bis, the second brother
The story of Eng, the third brother

YOU are cordially invited to search for your face among the many faces contained in the activities section, which turned a deaf ear to the Muses and a bright face to Ogden Nash.

YOU are cordially invited to turn to the personalities section and meet a surprising and diabolical new visitor to those pages.

YOU are cordially invited to step aside for a moment while we turn the spotlight on the heroine of our book, and INTRODUCE

President HORACE A. HILDRETH

The President

President Horace A. Hildreth is, in a sense, a member of the Class of 1953, for he came to Bucknell with us, underwent his first experience with the reception line during Freshman Week, and wandered around feeling just a bit lost even as we did. Our caps and dinks are gathering dust, but the president has never lost the New England accent, the outdoors nature, and the hearty manner which he originally brought to Bucknell.

He has gained the respect of the student body through his sincerity and frankness on every occasion. We have come to look forward to the "family talks" at Convocations, when Dr. Hildreth tells us just what he thinks about topics ranging from Communism to football. It may be a cliché to remark that his door is always open to students, yet we must admit that he remains one of the most "approachable" of presidents. The president and his charming wife are gracious hosts to dozens of campus organizations and multitudes of campus visitors during the year, and Dr. Hildreth can carve a roast with dexterity that would put a Cordon Bleu chef to shame.

Although we leave behind this one honorary member of the Class of '53, we will not forget his sympathy for our undertakings and our escapades, and his devotion to Bucknell and all for which she stands.

The Deans

Three of the busiest individuals at Bucknell University are our deans, who have the demanding task of serving as liaison officers between the students and the faculty, the president and the students. They must be, and are, equipped to handle problems both academic and social, to tackle routine tasks of organization and unusual situations which may arise.

Dr. William H. Coleman, dean of the college, has been a wise and understanding administrator, combining a rare knowledge of Shakespeare with a passion for mystery stories. He is in constant demand as an after-dinner speaker, and his office is perpetually filled with students seeking advice, consolation, or, on occasion, leniency.

Miss Mary Jane Stevenson, dean of women, must receive much of the credit for the smooth functioning of the Women's Student Government, the Honor System, and the general esprit de corps among the women students. The standing and wholehearted applause which she receives from the entire assemblage of women students every Moving Up Day is merely a small indication of the esteem in which she is held by every Bucknell co-ed, as well as by men students, faculty, and administration.

Mr. Malcolm E. Musser, dean of men, is responsible not only for the "talking ivy" tradition, but for many improvements in student-faculty relations brought about by his tireless work with SFC and the men's counselors. An enthusiastic sportsman, and a real man's man, Dean Musser combines a keen sense of fair play with a deep devotion to Bucknell University and her students.

Long, long ago in The Valley of the Buffalo, there was a father who had three sons. And these three brothers were as similar and as different as three branches on the same tree. The eldest was called Ab. He first saw light on a warm summer day and soon began to grow and flourish, until all who saw him began to doubt that he would ever stop growing. But Ab never became concerned about his growth. For even though he passed through some awkward stages in his development, he always knew that in time he would achieve his fullest stature. And his senses began to become more sensitive and perceptive, until one day he felt a tingling in his mind and in his fingers; and these sensations were so strong that he could not deny them, and he was compelled to action.

It was one of those cold winter days when the earth was tucked up in snow too deep to walk upon. It was not a day to hunt or fish, and Ab had no desire to leave the warmth of his home. He sat there bundled in furs, and his mind and eyes wandered around the cave. The bareness of the walls drew his attention for the first time, and it disturbed him. And it was while he was thinking about this that the sensation stirred him. He arose, picked up a sharp stone lying on the ground, and went to the wall. His mind was filled with pictures of the deer he could not hunt that day and the birds that were not singing to him as they did when he walked through the forest. He missed them. And then, before he was aware of it, he was scratching on the wall. And when he was done the deer was on the wall and the bird was flying above it. He stepped back and admired it. After he had looked for a long time at what he had done, he returned tired and contented to his warm furs. He was no longer lonely.

Love came to Ab at a reptile roast. It was at this annual celebration, when most of the neighboring tribes assembled to celebrate the end of the rainy season, that the first signs of love twisted his stomach. His tribe was seated on one side of the roaring fire, and the other tribes were gathered around. And when Ab raised his head, the better to chew, he saw her face through the flames. And he could swallow no more, so strong was his love for her. All night long he sat and stared at her, and she stared at him, and a few times he thought she even winked at him—or was that just the flickering of the fire?

Before the feast was over, he managed to find out her name, and the very sound of it made his blood pulsate in anapests and iambs. And every corpuscle in his body tripped the light trochaic. And he felt he had to tell her of his love, but he was too bashful. So he worked for three whole days chiselling his thoughts on a tablet. And when it was done, he arose early one morning before anyone was awake, and went to her village, carrying the tablet on his back, and stood it up in the doorway.

of her cave. And his back ached for a week after, so heavy was the tablet. But he loved. And a while later, he found a love note written in a daintily chiselled hand in front of his cave. She had answered him. And when he had read what she had written, he could do nothing but write her another poem on another tablet. And this exchange of modest love notes went on for many moons, until he felt his back would break. And he wondered whether it would always be that as love grows stronger, stamina grows weaker. And it was at the time when he was about to decide which was more important, that he received a billet-doux from her which suggested that her body too was growing tired. She suggested that they write their poems upon trees in the forest. And they took turns writing each day, emblazoning the entire forest with their love, until one day they met by chance. Ab was writing on one side of an enormous sassafras tree, and as he wrote an especially long line, circling around the tree, he discovered her, writing on the other side of the same sassafras tree. And their words came together . . .

The next day her father arrived at Ab's cave, and behind him was a long line of his tribesmen, each carrying one of Ab's love letters. And her father demanded that they be married. So love came to Ab.

Drama and Speech

One day in early spring when Ab and his wife were walking along the flowery path on top of the cliff, and the birds were singing and the brachiopods were humming quietly, Ab felt so moved to joy that he sat down on a high rock and began to speak to himself about the wonders of life. And as he spoke, and his voice gained strength and new words came to him, his voice grew louder and richer, and his arms made great sweeping gestures almost of their own accord. And the other passers-by on the cliff road gathered around to watch this strange spectacle, but Ab was glad of their presence. As the crowd grew larger, the voice of Ab swelled and became even more eloquent, even to waxing lyrical in its intonations.

But the wife of Ab, who was watching and listening in the shadow of the rock, felt her face grow red with shame, and she begged Ab to come down from the rock. Ab was sorrowful, but to please his wife he prepared to leave his little platform. As he stepped down, the crowd of people beat their hands one against the other, making a loud but altogether pleasant sound. And Ab stepped up upon his platform once again, and spoke more grandly than ever.

One day Ab's wife came to him and told him she was bored, so she prevailed upon her mate to make a trip. And even though it was against his will, he agreed, and the next day they set out.

After traveling for a few weeks they came to a river and in the middle of the river was an isle. And there were people living on the isle who rowed across and welcomed Ab and his wife and brought them to their village. Here there was a rare perfume in the air, and upon further investigation, Ab found that the scent was clinging to all the women. And for the first time Ab noticed that they were all beautiful; he also noticed that there seemed to be a woman behind every tree—and there were many, many trees.

Ab's wife noticed also—especially she noticed the gleam in her mate's eye. And she was jealous so that she went to the market place and there bought many different skins to wear. She was most fond of the rarest skins, as women are wont. And Ab was kept busy for many days working to pay for what his wife had bought. And finally he became so tired that in the middle of one night, he awoke and carried his wife to the river. He borrowed a boat, and they rowed across, leaving behind the isle of desirable women and expensive skins.

And as they traveled, they came upon the lands of the yellow-haired people. And Ab and his wife spent a short time among them, drinking a strange new liquid that was made from the grains of the fields. And the golden brew made Ab and his wife feel light-headed, so that they did things that were strange to them.

Then they bid farewell to these people and ventured into the land of the hoot. And here the people were of dark skin and black hair. They too had a liquid that was new to Ab and his wife and it was made from the grapes of the vines. And the people told of their descendants, who had come from a far-off land by way of the sea-in-the-middle-of-the-land. They told their story so well that Ab and his wife asked for a boat and set sail to find this ancient place.

And they came upon the finger lands that stretched and pointed into the sea. And those of the land wore long skins and were of an active nature, so that they held many competitions of skill and the winner was crowned with a wreath of laurel. And the gods of the land sat high upon a mountain, smiling down upon the people, and Ab and his wife were welcomed and thrived under their eyes. But after many days they moved on.

And Ab and his wife continued their journey, crossing the range of high mountains and entering the peninsula. And the people of the land were warm and friendly and colorful and the food they served was hot to the tongue and brought tears to the eyes.

One day as Ab and his wife were crossing a wide plain they heard the snorting of an animal and turned to see a great black beast with curving horns charging down upon them. Ab motioned his wife behind a boulder and tried to hit the beast with his club, but the club struck a rock and was broken in twain. As the great creature snorted and pawed the ground, Ab took off his cloak and waved it before him so that the enraged monster tore it with his pointed horns. At last Ab picked up a pointed stick, and as the beast charged for the third time Ab plunged the stick behind its head. And the animal fell and was dead.

Ab's wife came from behind the boulder clapping her hands. And she took the rose she was wearing in her hair and threw it at her husband's feet. Ab picked it up and kissed it, and walked off the plain to the clicking of castanets.

History

And it happened that during the course of one year the people of Ab were entered into a war with the people of another valley. And great were the feats of the heroes, and laden were the altars with sacrifices to the gods. But the people of Ab were defeated in the war, and returned to their valley to live again in peace.

Ab was mindful of the war and the courage of his people and he wished to write of their exploits so that the tale would be known to his children and his children's children. And he wrote of the battles, and of the duels between the heroes, and he named the ships, one by one, which had carried his people to the land of the enemy. And some of the deeds were clear in his mind, and others came to him as in a dream, and all of them he wrote down upon the great tablets of stone. And as he wrote it appeared that he could also make known the manner in which wars should be fought, and the reasons that men engaged in them. And all these things he set down also.

And after many years, he had finished his story, and he called forth the people of the valley and read to them the story of their battle. And in the writings of Ab it seemed that his people had won the war and had returned victorious to their valley. So the people of the valley were happy, and they called him the truth teller and revered him ever afterward.

Ab was very angry and his roars filled the cave and echoed over the peaceful Valley of the Buffalo. And the wife of Ab was very sorrowful and her tears made the flames leap into red and blue fingers as she cooked the evening meal. For it had happened that the wife of Ab had given in trading more than the fifty herring which Ab had allowed her, and the moon would pass into its crescent before the cave of Ab would smell again of the roasting meat. And Ab took pity, and tried to tell his wife the value of a herring, and how many herring strung together would keep food in the mouths of their children for the cycle of the moon. But the tears of his wife fell faster, and she refused to learn of the herring, which were of no importance to her. So Ab was forced to keep the string of herring around his own belt, and when it came time to trade for food, he would go to the trading rock and return home with the food. And the wife of Ab was joyful, for she was content to cook and care for the children and have no care for the counting of the herring.

News came to the Valley of the Buffalo that a great run of tuna had filled the nearby bay, and all the men of the tribe went down to the bay in boats. And Ab went with them, his oldest son by his side. But his son went only as far as the beach and helped Ab push the boat into the water and then remained on the shore watching his father row toward the sea.

Ab had been out for only half the day when a big fish bit on his line. But the fish was too powerful and Ab could not pull him in without breaking the line. And the fish pulled the boat farther away from the shore in the direction of the end of the earth. And after three days, when Ab felt sure that he would fall off the end of the earth and never see his cave and his wife and his son ever again, the fish died of hunger. And Ab pulled him in and tied him to the side of the boat. And then a storm broke over the sea and the waves grew to the size of mountains, tossing the little boat from the peaks into the valleys. But Ab held fast and that night the sea became calm. And the fish was gone and Ab was lost.

But as he raised his eyes in prayer he saw the map of the heavens, and the largest and brightest star in the night was familiar to him. He remembered how it looked to him from the front of his cave. And he set his course and his heart on the star and paddled toward it. Three days later he sailed into the bay and everyone was on the shore to greet him.

Every so often there came a day when Ab had nothing essential to do. There was enough to eat and the furs on his back were not in need of replenishment. And when these days came, Ab loved best to walk through the woods by the lakes and streams, watching the little animals hiding themselves in the grass, touching the petals of a single red flower, listening to the breeze as it flowed gently through the reeds that lined the lake. And he walked among the reeds and he heard one sound when he stood here, another sound when he stood there. And he went down closer to the reeds and he noticed that some were young and thin, and others were older and stronger. The hollows in the centers differed too, as did the heights, and it occurred to him that all this variation might be the reason for the different sounds. And picking up a sharp stone, he cut down a reed and blew across the top of it like the wind, but the sound was small and faint. He put an end against his mouth and blew again, and the air flowed out through a hole and with it a long, thin sound that only the wind could make. But he had made it now, too. Ab became excited and he cut down another reed and blew into it and he heard a completely different sound; and the third one made a sound somewhere between the first two. And he looked out over the lake and saw all the reeds that were growing there, and his head was filled with a thousand different sounds.

As he walked homeward he played with the reeds, blowing now this one and then the next. But there was also a fourth sound—the one made by his heart when he thought of all the reeds he was going to cut down and all the sounds he was going to make.

Philosophy

Ab kissed his wife goodbye one morning after his usual cup of coconut juice, but when he tried a second time to kiss her, she refused. He immediately became indignant and told her that this was not the right attitude for a civilized wife to take. And then she told him that she didn't like to kiss him because his growth of beard scratched her delicate skin. And he apologized and left. As he walked through the woods, he tried to think of a way whereby he could kiss his wife without scratching her.

And then he stubbed his toe, and in the stubbing cut it. But he paid no attention to the bleeding because an idea presented itself to him. If he could cut his toe with this stone, why couldn't he cut his beard? And he spent the whole rest of the day shaving his face. And when he was done, despite the many nicks and cuts on his face, he was happy. And he ran through the woods, so anxious was he to show his wife what he had done for her.

But when he burst into the cave and told her, she was not happy, because she had spent a very difficult day and had been kept busy changing the baby's bear-skin and dusting the stalagmites.

And that night Ab remained awake, wondering how life could seem so good to him and so bad to his wife. And he knew that no matter how many times he wondered, he would never find the answer.

All hail the political honeymoon

The chieftain of the valley was very old and one night he left the valley forever. And the men of the tribe met to choose a new leader, but they had a very difficult time deciding between Ab and some of the other men. And they spent many hours in argument and deliberation.

But while the men were so occupied, the women of the tribe were also gathered and they too were trying to make a choice. For they felt that they had been dominated by the men long enough, and that the time had come to have a woman lead the nation. And Ab's wife was elected. And this came about because she had suggested the idea and because the other women were not really too interested. And the women went to the men and told them that if the wife of Ab were not appointed chieftess they would not cook, nor keep cave, nor bear children any longer. And the men laughed—but the women made good their threats, and they did not cook, nor keep cave, nor anything else.

Then the men too became stubborn and refused to hunt or fish. And the babies cried from hunger and the women too were hungry, until finally the crying of the babies and the crying of their own bodies were too much for the women, so that they surrendered. And Ab was chosen chieftain of the Valley of the Buffalo.

Psycho-rigamarole

And Ab's nights were filled with unrest, for he would lie upon his skins all night, tossing and turning; and his mind was heavy with dreams. And when he awoke he told his wife of his dreaming and she became worried. She had been watching him eat his breakfast every morning and was aware that he would only pick at his hippopotamus blubber and nibble his porcupine kidneys. And his disturbed mind was so great a problem to her that she suggested he journey to see the witch doctor.

And Ab made the long trip and came upon the wise man and told him of his troubles. He was so tired from the long trip that he laid himself down upon the witch doctor's rhinoceros-skin couch and thereupon spoke whatever came into his mind. And the wise man listened in a most non-directive manner, mumbling incantations as he listened.

And when Ab had finished, he felt relieved, so that he arose and thanked the wise man and paid him his fee of ten herring. And Ab returned to his cave happy and at peace.

That night while Ab was sleeping blissfully, the witch doctor tossed and turned upon his rhinoceros-skin couch. And his nights were ever after filled with disturbing dreams.

And sickness spread itself over the land. And rare was the house where the whimpering of the diseased was not heard. Such a house was not the house of Ab, for his first born lay dying. And the child would not eat even the sweet strawberry which he had always loved, nor would he sleep. But he would continue to cry in the presence of the moon and in the absence of the moon, so fitful was the child.

And Ab and his wife watched over the child and tried to help him, but all they could do was comfort him for a short time. And within a week the child died.

And a feeling of desperation came upon Ab. And he looked at the muscles in his arms and in his hands and he knew they were powerless. And he climbed to the top of the mountain and looked across at the land—at the tall growing trees in the forest below him. And an anger clawed at his heart—an anger so great that he could not control it. And he ran to a large boulder lying near the edge of the cliff, and in his anger and sorrow pushed the boulder off the mountain. And it rolled heavily down the mountain side, crushing the small blades of grass in its path. But when it had passed, the power of the sun drew the grass up again.

Sociology

And it happened that Ab was no longer happy in the valley, and the speech of its people was no longer pleasing to his ears. For the fertile fields had become a wasteland, and the springs had dried and the rocks were red from the beating of the sun. The people of the valley had forgotten the ways of their fathers, and the traditional chants no longer echoed beneath the stars in the evenings. The men found their only strength in leaning together, and the forests were empty of happy hunters and fishers, for the people remained in their caves without sound. And a stillness filled the land.

So Ab and his wife departed from the valley and journeyed until they came to a place where a green hill rose beside a white stream, and Ab knew he had found his home. Ab and his wife gave thanks for their new land, and lived in happiness beside the white water with their children and their children's children.

And the generations of Ab multiplied and gathered themselves over the face of the earth. And those gathered here are . . .

And the second son of the father in the Valley of the Buffalo was called Bis. And he was very much like his older brother in that his mind was filled with the wonder of the world about him. But unlike his brother, Ab, he was not content merely to look upon nature and admire it. For there was a burning question in his mind that demanded answers, and he would not stop until they had made themselves apparent to him.

He wondered about the animals and how they lived, so that he would watch them from a hiding place. And everything he saw he marveled at and remembered so that he could pass on this new knowledge.

And when an animal was killed at the hunt, he would ask for the task of severing the meat from the bone, that in doing so he could observe how the bones and the sinews were joined. And to each part he gave a name. And he knew all the parts of the animals.

He observed that the birds laid eggs and that the animals brought forth their young alive. But when he was sure of the difference, he came upon the turtle which did not fly but did lay eggs. And he made a note of this and remembered that the turtle would swim and that perhaps it was a fish.

And Bis found that as soon as he discovered one answer, two more questions would present themselves in his mind. But he was never discouraged, and continued his searching, knowing that one day he would find all the answers.

The heart of Bis was full of sorrow because he was in love with a maiden, the most beautiful of the valley, with skin like the deer, and bones like the antelope. But the maiden did not return the love of Bis, for he had no skill in telling her all the beautiful things that women are fond of hearing, and he could not write of his love like Ab, nor yet make music. And the maiden scorned Bis because he was rough and unskilled.

So Bis went into the woods where he was happy, and there found a strange plant with a flower like a star, and this he ground into a pulp and mixed with it the water of a clear brook and the heart of a turtle dove and the soul of a pigeon. And he cooked them in a flaming cauldron while muttering strange incantations and describing strange symbols. When the fire died he took the mixture to his beloved and bade her drink and her heart was light and she needed no poetry and no music. And Bis took her to wife.

Commerce and Finance

And the season of the hunt came to the land, bringing with it the wild ducks to the lakes and the gentle deer to the forest. And Bis and his neighbor went hunting in the woods.

They had walked only a short distance from their caves, when they came upon a small stream that burst forth from between two rocks on the face of a cliff. And they stopped by the spring and drank of the water, the sun being warm. After a while Bis arose, wanting to continue the hunt, but his neighbor just lay upon the ground by the spring. And Bis tried to convince his neighbor that it was important to hunt, but no matter what he said, his neighbor remained on the ground. And Bis finally left his neighbor and went off to hunt.

The next morning Bis told his wife about the new spring and she sent him to get some water. When he arrived at the stream, he found that his neighbor had erected a stone wall around it and was sitting on top of the wall. And as Bis proceeded to draw water up, his neighbor came to him and said, "This stream is mine." And he proposed that Bis could use the water only if he gave his neighbor a third of his kill in the hunt. The neighbor had a club behind his back; and the bargain was made.

Education

And it happened that the children of Bis were in great need of teaching, for they were ignorant of the ways of the animals and of the words of their ancestors. And Bis was determined to have them learn, so he took himself to the seer of the tribe, and inquired of him in what manner it was proper to teach children. And many and winding were the replies of the seer, for he told Bis that it was necessary to study the mind of the child, and the growth of the child, and the things that are pleasing to a child before one can teach. But Bis was displeased, and he went to another seer for advice. And this seer told him that the children should teach themselves and be free to follow their own wills as the winds of heaven play among the clouds. So Bis went to still a third seer, who told him that the children should be taken firmly into a cave and struck with a willow wand when they did not learn.

But Bis returned to his cave full of doubt and wonderings as to the things he had learned. And the children came to him running, and inquired of his trip. So Bis paid no heed to the words of the seers and began to teach.

Rocks at home . . .

Geography and Geology

And the season of falling leaves came to the forest and the twigs and the brown leaves made a carpet that crackled as it was walked upon. And one night Bis awoke and looked out of his cave and found that the entire forest was in flames. Quickly he aroused the tribe in the valley and they fled to the island in the river. For three days they waited on the island and watched the rich forest die in red robes and black smoke. And the animals that could swim had also fled to the island so that everything living shared the island.

And when the fire had spent itself and moved toward the north, the people returned to the mainland. And their fertile valley had become a grey land of soot and ash and cinder.

And winter blew over the land and covered the ugliness with a mask of white. And the cold wind froze the blood and cracked the teeth. But there was no wood to burn because the fire had destroyed it.

Even though he knew he would find no wood, Bis left his cave, for he could not stand the crying of the tribe. And as he walked, he came upon a deep hole which shined with a warm glow. And he saw that the black rock in the hole was burning. And he dug up some of it and brought it back to the cave and it continued to burn throughout the winter.

The wheel of misfortune

Bis awoke one morning as was his custom, ate his breakfast as was his custom, and pretended to listen to his wife talking, as was her custom. And he noticed that this morning she seemed to be hinting, because she was telling him of all the things she would like to have. She spoke of her neighbor's new ostrich plume which she wore in her hair, and of another neighbor's alligator satchel. And it seemed that every neighbor's wife had something that she wanted. And suddenly Bis remembered that this day marked the fifth year of their mating. And he knew that she was expecting a new token.

And he went walking over the fields thinking of all the things he could give her. And as he walked, he suddenly saw a sight that was wondrous to behold. Lying upon the ground was a piece of clear rock and from it burst all the colors of the rainbow. And these colors were pouring over the ground. And when he picked the glass up the colors ran through his fingers.

And he ran all the way home and went into the dark cave. He was clutching the glass in his closed hands and he told his wife to guess what it was. And she guessed everything from the ostrich plume to the alligator satchel and was wrong. And when he had made her guess long enough, he opened his hands and showed her the present. But the rainbow was not there. And his wife became angry and threw the glass at him, yelling that there were enough rocks in the cave already without having another one. And Bis was confused.

The Officers' Club

And the period of twenty years had passed since the last war, so that the people of The Valley of the Buffalo knew that it was time to renew their war with the people of the valley on the other side of the mountain.

And the leaders went around enlisting all the men of the tribe. And when the men did not want to go off to fight, they were told that it was their duty so that they could live in peace. And the men were confused, because they were already living in peace. But they had no choice and went off to fight.

And Bis too was called to help in the fight, not as a warrior but as an inventor. And he was given the job of producing new weapons. And he invented a long stick with a sharp point at the end that could be hurled at the enemy. And when it was used in battle, it was successful and the tribe won. But the next battle found that the enemy had captured some of the weapons and had made more to use against the people of Bis.

And Bis tired of inventing weapons that would kill, but he was reminded that he must produce these new inventions if he wanted to keep the peace. And Bis continued to discover and invent.

And the generations of Bis multiplied and gathered themselves over the face of the earth. And those gathered here are . . .

Now suppose, and this is purely hypothetical, that you were a second lieutenant and . . .

Chemical Engineering

And the third son of the father in the Valley of the Buffalo was called Eng. Eng was not content to look at the world and marvel at its wonders, for his greatest desire was to have more of all things in bigger numbers and in larger size. And Eng did not have a wife because he could not stand the small dainty ways of women. He did share his cave with a chimpanzee, which was the biggest chimpanzee in the entire forest.

Now Eng had heard tales about men who could turn dull metals into metals that were golden and precious. And he believed in his heart that if he could once perform this miracle, he might accomplish it again and again. So he set to work pouring many mixtures over a large piece of rock, and working many rites that only he knew. And he permitted time to perfect his experiment.

Now the chimpanzee was of a whimsical nature, and as Eng proceeded, the chimpanzee watched. And when Eng left the cave, the chimpanzee hid the piece of rock and put in its place a small rock of burnished gold. And when Eng returned and looked at his work he gave a metaphysical cry, and at once hurried all over the valley, collecting dull metal from the people and promising all manner of things in return. And he set the chimpanzee to work cutting down hollow bamboo poles to make an intricate network which he spread all over his cave. And he set to work.

And for weeks Eng remained shut within his cave and only the chimpanzee came out to obtain more bamboo poles or bananas. And when Eng finally did come forth from the cave after many moons he was very discouraged. And the people of the valley wondered greatly what he had been doing. And so did Eng.

On the outskirts of the Valley of the Buffalo was a wide river which was known to the people as The River of the Moon. Although Ab was content to gaze at the blue of the water, and although Bis liked to watch the movement of fish beneath the surface, Eng wanted more than anything to cross the river. So Eng measured the width of the river at its widest point, and at the place where the two sides most nearly met, and he calculated and he computed. All the while the chimpanzee watched. Eng told his brothers that he would build a road across the water, so that all the people might gain the far bank. His brothers laughed, but Eng searched for the strongest stones, and the largest trees, and the firmest clay. And the chimpanzee watched.

For many moons Eng labored, giving his strength to the jumping up and down on the logs to assure himself of their firmness. One day while Eng was working, the chimpanzee disappeared into the woods and did not return that day nor the next. Eng missed his cheerful chatter, but persisted in the building of his water-road until he had laid down the last log and patted in the last bit of clay. At last Eng ran back to the bank, crying out to the people to come and behold his handiwork.

As Eng stood there, he heard cries of joy, and beheld all the people of the village standing on the nearer bank. And with them was the chimpanzee, who had built a great raft with strong sides and comfortable rush seats for the women. And all the people of the village were paying the chimpanzee two bananas each for the privilege of gliding over the water. Eng stood alone, deserted, on his beautiful water road while the raft passed under him. And to this day he swears by his fathers that the chimpanzee grinned at him.

It happened one day that while Eng was sitting alone in his cave, he received a visit from his brother Ab. And Ab told him that he was about to undertake a journey to a distant land, but he was fearful of harm that might overtake his family during his absence. He begged Eng to discover some way in which his wife might send for him if she had need of him. And Eng, although he had no wife, was so gentle a man that he understood the problem of his brother. So he took his bag of precious tools from the shelf of the cave, and set about making a marvelous box that might send his voice to the ears of Ab, no matter how far away he might be, or in what distant country he might wander.

And Eng worked far into the night, and all this time the chimpanzee was quiet, and did not chatter according to his custom, for even the merry beast realized the wonder that was being performed. And at last, when the sun drove his heavy horses over the mountain of the valley, Eng went to the cave of Ab with a magic box that would carry his voice to the ears of his brother. And Ab left the valley carrying the box, with the knowledge that Eng would find him in some manner if his wife or his children had need of him.

Not a moon had passed when the wife of Ab came to Eng, and pleaded with him to send for her husband, for their youngest child was ill of a strange disease. So Eng took his box from the cave, and raising his eyes to the sun in prayer, he spoke into the box and called for Ab. And Ab heard him in a distant country, and returned with speed bearing fine herbs and potions that made his daughter soon well. And all the people of the valley marveled, and praised Eng, and gave him the title of "Voice Maker."

Now Eng was a heavy sleeper, and each night when he would put his head down upon the rushes of his bed, he would fall asleep in the twinkling of a snail's eye and dream all night, often in color. But now the dreams of Eng were disturbed by strange noises in his cave, and all night long there were rustlings and murmurings, and the bananas vanished mysteriously, and the grain was slightly nibbled. And Eng at length discovered that his cave was inhabited by many baby dinosaurs, who were all equally full of mischief and liked to dance in circles during the hours that men slept. And Eng's chimpanzee feared the dinosaurs, and refused to catch them, so that Eng despaired of ever recovering the deep sleep of his peaceful nights.

At length Eng conceived a plan, and he remained in his cave with his wonderful bag of tools, and wrought another great box that would catch the dinosaurs, and he filled it with tempting bits of newly ripened bananas, and when he went to bed that night he placed the box near his bed. And every morning Eng would find a new baby dinosaur in his trap, and he would take them far away into the forest, so that his cave was no longer filled with their mischief. And all the people of the valley marveled, and came to the cave of Eng to purchase one of the traps, which proved to Eng that if you build a better baby dinosaur trap, the world will beat a path to your door.

And the generations of Eng prospered and multiplied and gathered themselves over the face of the earth. And those gathered here are . . .

Student Faculty Congress

I'm told that S.F.C. is the organization that handles a good deal of the student's money, and I wouldn't want to begrudge it.

But I was wondering if after they're finished balancing their own accounts they might give me a hand with my budget? And I think it's a good idea to have an organization where students and faculty can talk and listen to each other after class.

Because I'm sure, if we did a little more listening, a lot more of us would pass.

*All the people paying to go to Bucknell are students.
Half of them are women.
Whenever you have a group of people you have some form

Which can be designated under the term of Association.
Put them all together they spell W. S. G. A.

But there's just one thing I can't understand, though I've

Why, if we all have honor, is it necessary to have a council?*

And if it weren't for Carrie Nation

*We'd probably all be lying around in a monstrous state of

The L' Agenda

There are some publications that are informative, and others that are creative, and some even literary, gadzuk!

And then there's the yearbook.

The editors of ET CETERA and the BUCKNELLIAN come down here and watch us ironing photographs and etching lines with razors to save money

And they act rather condescending about the whole thing, but we don't think it's funny.

You wouldn't either, if you'd ever cut a slice off your finger juggling razor blades and winches

While trying to fit the ten inch picture of some unknown organization into a space of only two inches.

We got awfully tired of photographing joyful clubs with happy faces and wished that someone would sneer

Nastily once in awhile—but they never did, with the result that we have one-hundred and ninety-eight glossy pages of leer.

And let me tell you there are people who come out of their holes in conventions

Just in time to get into an organization picture and throw off our dimensions.

At the moment we're worried about the deadline, so if there's no objection,

We're going to stop this here and now, and go on to another section.

MOLLIE BROWN, first semester editor

The Bucknellian

People are always talking about the press and its power,
But I've never seen more commotion caused in political circles than the day that the BUCKNELLIAN WENT EISENHOWER.

The staff proved their abilities

By staying at the office all night to put out an election issue, but they did have to come back to the dorm every few hours because, although the office has presses and type and things, it does lack certain facilities.

There were some editorials that were terse and some that were even tersa,
But they did make the Women's Dining Hall shift the cafeteria line from left to right, or maybe it was vice versa.

Almost everybody at Bucknell reads the BUCKNELLIAN, and you Really have to in order to learn about the latest pinning, because otherwise you might commit the terrible faux pas of asking a pinned girl to a pledge dance, wrestling match, or a barbeque.

Two writers who certainly have the knack

For creating comment are Downey Stones who talked back to the ivy and Don R. Smith who just talked back.

The sports-men

Business Manager ROBERT KELLER

BARBARA ROEMER, second semester editor

And we can't review the year without mentioning Bill Bulick who would rather die
 Than draw a cartoon which didn't say in small letters somewhere and not too subtly "Lambda Chi."
 I wonder sometimes whether or not I'd have the patience to sit Around a horseshoe table all day long and be a member of the "Fourth Estate" quoi qu'on dit.
 They, most of them anyway, have developed a wheeze
 From running up and down the hill interviewing balding dignitaries and visiting VIP's,
 But they love it.
 And get an aesthetic thrill out of writing a classified ad, or even the headline above it.
 As we should have mentioned before, but didn't, the BUCKNELLIAN comes out regularly every Thursday, and as the year passes
 Students who set their watches by its hour of distribution almost invariably wind up late for Friday classes.

*I'm one of those people who scoffs at Tables of Contents, and Guide

So that whenever I go to a museum or an exhibit I never bother with any directories.
No artificial crutches for me;
I'm going to make it as difficult as can be.
But girls, when you come to Bucknell and you want to avert disaster—
I'd recommend reading the Handbook—it's a heckuva lot faster.*

Innovations in communication

. . . and "Innovations on Idiocy"

There are at least fifty times a year when I have so many things to do and I don't know where to begin, that I offer up praise to Marconi.

Because in my procrastination, I can either turn on the radio or go down to Guy Payne's for a sandwich of cheese and bologna.

And now, since the new transmitter has been installed on the hill it's very easy to get Vooboo;

Whereas before, when I used to turn on the radio, all I could get were squeeks and groans that sounded like incantations from the old voodoo.

So who cares if my thoughts are clear or muddy?

I'd rather listen to the radio than study!

*I heard a nasty rumor in the dorm the other night.
Someone said the engineers don't like books, won't read, can't write.
But they put out a magazine, so squelch that rumor in whatever dorm you lie.
But this is what I'd like to know—is the magazine written in English or in Formulae?*

Staff of THE BUCKNELL ENGINEER

Et Cetera

Editor PHILIP ROTH and Business Manager ROBERT PINCUS

I looked at a catalogue once and I distinctly remember it saying that the three-hundred acres were covered with stately elms and sycamores—one to every square meter

But when I walk along the campus earnestly searching for trees, all I can find are signs advertising ET CET-ERA.

Still I really shouldn't complain when they cover the campus with posters, Because after the magazine is all sold out, I go around gathering them and take them home and cut them up into coasters.

And, if the truth be known, we all could stand to be more literary,

So that when Oral Quizzes come around we wouldn't feel so completely jittery.

The literary staff grapples with style and content

... while the business staff fly helium balloons and track down advertisers

THE PERFORMERS

DR. HAROLD COOK, Director

Men's Glee Club

*When it comes to giving praise, I'm not one to dilly-dally,
So I'd like to say here and now that I've never heard more perfect diction than the Men's Glee Club singing Down in the Valley.
Seventy-five men singing shoulder to shoulder
Making the wind blow colder and colder.
"Build me a castle forty feet tall,"
So I can look over Doctor Cook's shoulder and see them all.*

Managers

Accompanists

The Men's Glee Club

Women's Glee Club

*If ever there's a time I feel hotsy-totsy,
It's when the Women's Glee Club sings, accompanied on the piano by Potsy.
And when Miss Kleinfelter waves her magic hand,
All I can think of is "Strike Up the Band."
And I'm certainly glad Robert Burns knew about only one grain and therefore couldn't be fickle—
Because what could be sillier than listening to all those ladies singing Coming Through the Pumpernickle. . .*

MISS HELEN KLEINFELTER,

Managers

The Women's Glee Club

The Bucknell University Symphony Orchestra

The Band

As some poet or other said, "There's something about a parade that sets the blood astir,"

And whenever I see Mr. Floek and his group marching toward the stadium, I get that stirry feeling and I know what poets are fer.

And then during the game there's that section known as half time when you used to go for hot dogs or take the flask off your hip.

*But now it's much more fun to watch the twirler twirl and secretly hope she'll make a slip—
But she rarely does.*

The Symphony Orchestra

What could be nicer or springier

Than listening to the orchestra playing the overture from Die Meistersingier?

Or one of Wagner's delightful symphonies

Played on the strings and featuring the tympanies?

As you can see from what I've written

If music could kill, I'd be smitten.

The Bucknell University Band

Chapel Choir

The Chapel Choir

Every Wednesday morning, fifty students go down early, and, for aconstical purposes, perch
On the side, the inside, of the Methodist Church.
Somewhat later a second group of students comes in and sits in the pews.
The first group intends to inspire, invoke, and elevate the second group, which has but one thought: to snooze.

Mixed Chorus

The Mixed Chorus consists of one hundred and fifty voices waiting for Christmas, so they can sing the Messiah in twelve part harmony, and cause a whole multitude of audience to stand up and listen to the Hallelujah Chorus for ten minutes before they can sit down again on the bleachers in Davis Gym.
Which is an awfully strange place to be singing a hymn.

The trial scene from The Madwoman of Chaillot

Cap and Dagger

I occasionally ponder whether the old Greeks—the true Dionysuses
(When they were putting on a show) ever ran up against so many crises

As Cap and Dagger seems to crawl into?

Or did they have just as many—just as easy to fall into?

Did they have to argue about how many points to give Aeschylus for writing Agamemnon?

And did he have a committee head that you could really depend on?

Did they have rules that said they couldn't eat, drink, smoke, or swear in the Theatre at Epidaurus?

And did their patrons say, "Don't do one of those classical Sanskrit plays, they're sure to bore us"?

Did they have to worry about getting enough money out of their choregus?

And what did they do when their choregus was a poor-egus?

Did they ever sit and wail because "no-one new ever tries out"?

And how did they ever achieve the realism when Oedipus puts his eyes out?

Yes, I guess they had just as many problems as C & D has, but

I'm sure things around here will be better and the productions ever greater

When we raise enough money and can build our own University Theatre.

MR. FORREST D. BROWN, General Secretary

Christian Association

I've been spending a great deal of time this year in the capacity of a member of the Christian Association,
And I am sure that there is no other organization on campus that has such a wide range of ramification,
As this organization, the Christian Association,
I've been busily employed translating Bucknell's traditions and heritage into transcripts,
Out of the original Sanskrit;
Then there was that eight weeks I spent rediscovering the Bible, and let me tell you I turned a perfect shade of lime,
When I found out it had been there all the time;
Hours have just flown by while I've gathered logs for Freshman Firesides, and been quiet in Chapel, and gone to Burma, and not bothered to go to bed Saturday night because it was time for the Nine-Thirty Class, Or Mass.
But the most fun of all was when we went underground into cell groups and distributed subversive little pamphlets about WSSF and Student Church;
And of course the perennial search
For others who want to spend a great deal of time next year in the capacity of members of the Christian Association,
That grand organization of ramification.

Bucknell Village

Not too conveniently situated near Bucknell, but near the outlying farms and their tillage,
Are a number of small but called in the catalogue comfortable apartments called Bucknell Village.
They have lots of babies and worries about pasteurized milk and frozen orange juice
And you can usually find husbands on the second floor of the Carnegie Building arguing about roof repairs with Moose.
When they aren't taking care of babies the wives join a club for reading cultural books and drinking tea
While their husbands all study chemistry and engineering and shudder when they hear the strains of Anchors Aweigh.

Debate Club

The Debate Club

If there's one organization I wouldn't want to berate, It's that organization that sits around all day and does nothing at all but debate.

Under the expert advising of Professor Merritt, Every member keeps his nose to the grindstone like the proverbial ferret.

*With Pro's and Con's, arguments and rebuttals galore,
When they finally end up two days later, they're at exactly the same place they were before.*

*But don't get me wrong—I'm all for it.
Besides, with all the noise they make, it's impossible to ignore it.*

*If there's ever a time when I become discombobulated,
It's when I walk along campus and I hear people saying,*

*"There goes a Bucknellian who's not internationally related!"
So I've subscribed to all the magazines I know of that are weekly, monthly and bi-annual,*

'Till now I feel that I've become internationally related down to my minutest granal.

So let's give a hand to Mr. Hollister and the kids who believe like Wendell Wilkie,

That we'd better start thinking in terms of One World, or pretty soon we'll all be lying in boxes that are lined with satin and silky.

ALPHA PHI OMEGA, National Service Fraternity

Alpha Phi Omega

I'll never forget the day when I nearly wanted to cry when I found out that they had discontinued maid-service at schools like Harvard, Princeton, and Yale,
But the only thing that stopped me was that I realized that here at Bucknell we didn't have any maid service to bewail.
There are times when I come up to my untidy room on the hill and look at my own un-made pallet,
That I get the urge to call the president of Alpha Phi Omega to find their agency's rate for a private butler or valet.
So yell with glee and give out with shouts.
The boys in APO are all good scouts.

N. A. A. C. P.

This may be purely subjective on my part and I assure you I'm just surmising,
But it strikes me that many people who talk about racial discrimination are weak on the action and terribly strong on the theorizing.
But I don't think in terms of boundaries or views,
But rather of people, when I listen to the Howard Choir or hear Willard read the poetry of Langston Hughes.

Bridge Club

Bridge Club

Mrs. Blair, known to almost everyone as Mother, is quiet and might be thought of as shy, But when it comes to playing bridge she gets a ferocious gleam in her eye.

So the Bucknell chapter of the Friends of Culbertson and Gorham

Spend their time being North and South rather than going to other club meetings, which usually bore'em.

So you really don't have to go around begging For entertainment when you can have lots of fun learning about trumps and aces and doubling and redoubling and renegeing.

Jazz Club

I shudder every time I remember that I used to think that a blue flame was what you got when you turned on an electric gas range, And if anyone had asked me if I liked Chris Powell I would probably have said that I thought he was all right but that I really preferred Red Grange.

But now, thanks to Bruce Mitchell and the Jazz Club, I've become thoroughly cool and jazzy. And I can hardly wait till I get home and run down to Birdland so that I can let myself go and become completely razz-a-ma-tazzy.

Ski Club

Ski Club

Why would anyone who likes to ski pick this campus where all one ever hears is the patter of little rain drops On tin rooftops?

It's quite embarrassing for the ski club to sit around having hay rides and picnics (when they'd like to start swooping down hills on knotty pine wings Over little brooks and rills and things). This weather definitely shows a lack of imagination on someone's part.

FRATERNITIES AND SORORITIES

Panhellenic Council

Under the leadership of President Ann Sundberg, Panhellenic Council weathered the problems and unfamiliar procedures of the first sorority deferred rushing on campus. The cooperation of all the chapters was even more essential this year, in order to smooth over a period of five months under rushing rules.

One of "Pan-Hell's" chief tasks is to acquaint the Freshman women with the pros and cons of sorority membership, as well as to provide a medium through which sorority women may work together. Panhellie maintains a scholarship which is awarded annually to one or more women students who meet the qualifications. A scholarship cup is also awarded annually to the group attaining the highest average.

Interfraternity Council

Comprising a senior and junior representative from each of the thirteen fraternities, the council concerns itself mainly with cooperation among the groups, rushing rules, and Greek social activities. President Dan Jenkins led the group in the supervision of such popular activities as the intramural program and House Party Weekend.

One of the council's most enjoyable activities is the now annual Post Exam Jubilee, at which the groups present skits, satires, and occasional quiz programs. Tau Kappa Epsilon's "Golden Boys" won the contest this year with their original presentation. Social activities aside, IFC devotes much consideration to the scholarship problems of the fraternities, and encourages the maintenance of high averages.

THE CAMPUS LIFE

ATHLETICS

Football

Coach Harry Lawrence's "Thundering Herd" looked for awhile as if it might stampede on to new records this year, as it rolled over Lafayette, Muhlenberg, Temple, and Buffalo to pile up a 17-game winning streak. But Colgate's Red Raiders moved in for a 28-0 massacre before a crowd of 12,000 in an unusually sunny—for Homecoming—game at Memorial Stadium.

The first two games of the season saw Brad Myers and Burt Talmage, acting like the old "Touchdown Twins" of '51 fame, ably backed up by Co-Captains Abe Powelson and Frank Kirby. Myers and Talmage rolled up tallies against Lafayette and Muhlenberg, while Ken Adamec took to the air for 145 yards in the Muhlenberg game, hitting on eight out of 14 heaves.

The Herd came through with seconds remaining in the first half to unruffle the Temple Owls and keep the old Shoe on the 300 acres for another year. Although the Bucknell team lost spark plug Burt Talmage early in the second period, they went on to help Brad Myers make an 84 yard run to pay dirt, the longest scoring run in the 26-year Bucknell-Temple series.

The Bisons went on with half the "Twin" combo missing to beat the Buffalo Bulls before a sparsely scattered rooting section, only to be crushed beneath the fast-moving, smooth-rolling Colgate eleven on home territory the next week. Unfazed by the early injury of two key players, the Raiders held the Herd scoreless for the first time since 1948.

On the rebound, the Bisons took advantage of every Lehigh miscue, and trounced the engineers 28-6. This win was not to be the beginning of a new winning streak, however, for Bucknell, like the Democrats, got driven out of Washington by the Colonials from George Washington to the tune of 21-7. From there the Herd trotted back to Memorial Stadium to pull a victory out of the fire in a fourth period all-out offensive against Gettysburg. In this most exciting game of the season, we roared from behind to defeat the Bullets 26-21, with Ed Adams, Brad Myers and Tom O'Brien striking pay dirt.

The finale for the season found the Bisons dropping a 13-0 decision to an underdog Delaware team that seemed to thrive on the mud and rain which covered the field and the players.

Next season Coach Lawrence will have to replace seniors Abe Powelson, Frank Kirby, Brad Myers, Burt Talmage, Stan Butterworth, Harry Durner, Bill Grim, Harry McSorley, and Ray Pettit.

The end of an era

Frosh Football

The Baby Bisons under newcomer Benton Kribbs ended their season with a record of two wins and three losses, uncovering some talent as possible varsity threats for next year.

Opening with a 34-12 win over Lock Haven under the arc-lights at Memorial Stadium, the Frosh unveiled a strong running and passing attack. Bob Sears, who stood out in this first game with two TD's and four conversions, also came through for the Bisonettes against Kiski Prep and Franklin and Marshall.

Right half Bob Ford, guards Ned Gurevich and Art Kinney, and center George Wolf played good ball for the Frosh, as did the big tackle Tony Grimaldi. Two more promising varsity men are fullback Bill De Benedictis and Ron Hendricks, who put in some neat aerial work for the miniature herd.

Although inexperience and the loss of several key players had a part in the 19-13 loss to Kiski Prep, the Baby Bisons rocketed back for a smashing 25-0 win over an impressive F. & M. frosh team, as DeBenedictis, Sears, and Ford carried the pigskin in some spectacular broken-field running. Handicapped by rush week fatigue, the Frosh dropped their fourth game to Gettysburg and were held scoreless by the Lehigh Engineers in their final tussle.

The Soccer Team

Soccer

This year Coach Hank Peters was forced to build character: the "Bouncing Bunnies" retreated to their warren with a season record of 1-1-7. Bucknell started its season by facing the number one and two teams in the country—Temple 6-0 and State 10-1. The first league game with Washington College ended 4-1 and both Johns Hopkins and Gettysburg proved that games can be won by one point. Lock Haven State Teachers encouraged hope with a 3-3 tie, and Western Maryland provided it with a 6-2 win. F. & M. league champions prayed for rain and set Bucknell awash 2-0, while Delaware squeaked through to a 2-1 victory in the last fifteen seconds of play.

Wrestling

When the last mat had been folded up, and the last drop of liniment rubbed on the last aching back, the Bison grapplers could survey their seasonal record of four wins and four losses. This year's team was a seasoned bunch who didn't get some of those all-important "breaks" necessary for a successful season.

The Bisons started out by trouncing Western Maryland 24-5, but were dumped themselves by Lafayette the following week, 27-3. The grapplers bounced back to take a 24-5 win from Muhlenberg, but were soon handicapped by injuries to Ronnie Lloyd and Ken Tashjy, the regular heavyweight and 177-pounder. The Maackmen journeyed to Haverford and dropped a close 18-16 decision.

Bucknell copped its first dual triumph against Temple and Ursinus the following week, but lost out on the home mats to Gettysburg by a 22-6 tally. The season's clincher was dropped to Delaware University to the tune of 27-16, and the grapplers had to settle for a .500 season. Counting up injuries, ineligibilities, and greenness, wrestling fans may rest pretty well satisfied with the total.

The Varsity Basketball Team

Basketball

Memories of the 1952-53 basketball season are anything but pleasant, but none-the-less, the hardwood Herd will be remembered as a spirited, battling, aggregation which gave its all in each encounter, even though being outclassed in most instances.

The season opened on a hopeful note as the Ben Kribbs coached outfit won its opener in a 76-73 thriller in Davis Gymnasium. The sceptics, who foresaw a trying season for Bucknell's new basketball coach, wondered if he might pull a miracle of miracles and provide BU with a winning basketball team, though he lacked top-flight material.

Much of the Bisons' attack was built around Jim Poff, who, with Ron Reichman, was the only member of the 1951-52 team returning to action again this year. When Poff was injured in the third game of the season, the team lost a chance of winning a few of the close games which remained. Ron Reichman, Dick Bradway, Herb Cox, Don Lindsey, and Barry Parker carried on, but without Poff around when the going got rough the Herd couldn't quite make it.

It is not meant to describe Poff as a one man team, for with him in the lineup for the entire season, the Herd still would have wound up on the losing side of the ledger. The Team was composed of great competitors, but they simply met teams which were consistently vastly superior. It was a tough season for everyone. Bucknell has begun to build for the future. There'll be improvement next season and more the following year.

Frosh Basketball

Bill Lane's Freshman basketball team, though winning only three games in ten outings, gave rise to hopes for an improved varsity five in 1953-54.

High scorer for the yearlings was Dick Guttermuth who caged 182 points for an 18.2 average. Ted Groom, Ron Hendricks and Don Wain were other outstanding performers who may find themselves varsity performers next year.

Track

Last year's track team, under Captain James LePard, started off the season on April 25 with the annual Penn Relays, which proved more a warm-up than a clean-up for the speedsters, who had only seven lettermen remaining from the '51 squad.

Coach "Bus" Blum whipped them into shape in time for the Gettysburg meet which we won with a total of 90 points. A second meet on home territory found the trackmen trouncing Muhlenberg with a 92 point total against the opponent's 34. On foreign territory, however, we lost a meet to Colgate, 97-29, but recuperated with a win on May 14 against Dickinson.

The season concluded on a down beat with the Middle Atlantic Track and Field Association Championships, at which the track team earned only 2 points, but saw Bucknell's Harold Smith set a new Middle Atlantic record of 6' 4" for the high jump.

Intramural Sports

Delta Upsilon is leading the closely contested Intramural race as we go to press, with wins in soccer, handball, and cross-country track. The season started out with soccer, when DU piled up its first victory, and continued with Art Harrison and Carl Pfizenmaier taking the handball tournament and Red Macauley coming in for the house on the grueling cross-country marathon.

Phi Kappa Psi relied on fast-moving teamwork to win the popular basketball tournament, while Sigma Alpha Epsilon won wrestling. Individual wrestling victors were Jim Appleyard, Clarence Miller, Mel Woodward, Jack Fischer, Bill Pozzy, Tim Booser, Bud Hershberger, and Bill Benton.

Kappa Sigma took over the bowling tournament with some smooth curves and a lot to spare, and the boxing tournament got underway just as our presses rolled.

The Intramural Program is open to all men who want to participate, and has the highest participation percentage of any campus organization. John D. Plant may well claim the title of "father" of this comprehensive athletic program, for he first gave it impetus back in 1929. Teams battle in almost a dozen sports for the coveted Intramural Trophy, bearing in mind John Plant's motto of hard fights but clean ones.

Men's Physical Education

Mr. Harry L. Lawrence
Mr. Herbert H. Maack
Mr. William H. Lane

Halt of the old one two

All Freshman men students take a series of physical fitness tests which include a wide variety of contortions, twists, and twirls to test balance, coordination, and ability. Depending on the results of the test, the student will be placed in a corresponding group for physical education.

The first year is divided between the sports of soccer, track, softball, boxing, and wrestling, with most of the men looking forward to that great day as sophomores when they can discard the gloves and take up a tennis racket. We hear tell that tennis is the most popular of the subjects, if such they can be called, with golf running a close second. General indications point to the fact that the "social" sports are those in greatest demand, and our men are looking forward to the day when they can close a business deal on the 18th hole.

Other sophomore year athletics include bowling, badminton, handball, weight-lifting, and calisthenics. Out of class competitions are provided by the Intramural Program, although informal battles are often waged by groups of individuals or athletes "at liberty" for a season.

Women's Physical Education

Loomis Field, with plenty of leafy culverts to conceal lost golf balls or vanished arrows, and Justin Gymnasium, with a shaky ping-pong table and antediluvian lockers, are the centers of the women's athletic program. The sports program is divided between the curricular events and those sponsored by the Women's Athletic Association, which include intercollegiate play days, inter-class and inter-group competitions, and the annual May Day program.

Hockey season begins the year, with this year's highlight the journey of selected Bucknell women to the Mid-East Conference, where one freshman gained a berth on the All Mid-East Team which competed at the National Tournament at Sweet Briar, Virginia.

The closing of the hockey season leads to competitions in volleyball, basketball, swimming, bowling, tennis, and archery. Keen competition and good sportsmanship are stressed in both team and individual sports. The planning and execution of the entire program is left to the student-elected Women's Athletic Association, under President "Bugs" Harvey. This group sponsors the annual Sadie Hawkins Day Dance, a cabin party at Halfway, and the May Day festivities.

Mothers—and fathers too—are entertained by a May Day program which culminates a semester of hard work and planning by the gym department and the W. A. A. Pageantry, music, comedy, and elaborate ballet are climaxed by the crowning of the May Day queen, elected by the women students.

The final event on the calendar is the Awards Banquet, in which individuals and teams are recognized for their contributions to the year's program. Gold cups are presented to the outstanding senior girl and to the group attaining the highest number of points in inter-group competition.

The "B" Club

The B-Club

The B-Club, under president Abe Powelson, brings together all varsity athletes within a single organization. Outstanding players in major and minor sports are annually awarded letters and sweaters for their skill on the athletic field.

B-Club members sell programs at varsity games in order to remain self-supporting, and all varsity sweaters are purchased by the club for its members.

The club has been extending its activities for the past few years, and has been increasing in membership. They cooperate with the Booster Club in seeking to raise the general level of school spirit, both at athletic events, and during the year in general.

The Cheerleaders

The thirteen man-and-woman-cheerleading squad, under Captain Bobbie Roemer, led the pep rallies and send-offs for football season, cheered at home and away games for the Bisons, and added color and spirit to basketball season. "Oldtimers" Pat McColl, Pat Mansfield, Jim Gregg, Joe Lock, Sue Miller, and Walt McConnell were joined by newcomers Pat Groff, Annette Littlefield, Lolly Messersmith, Dellen Smith, Jim Urda, and Mike Kertis.

Twelve huge orange and blue megaphones and several new white sweaters were among the purchases made possible by the Booster Club. This group, with Bobbie as president and Marty Bowers as treasurer, aids the cheerleaders budget through funds collected during their annual membership drive in the fall.

The Cheerleaders

PERSONALITIES

ALMOST everyone picks up the New Yorker and riffles through the pages to find a Charles Addams cartoon before even glancing at the cover. Almost everyone picks up L'AGENDA and riffles through the pages to find fault with the editorial staff. This year the staff has prepared for the critical reader by confronting him with a Charles Addams cartoon, for who can criticize the very ground upon which his idol trod?

Not only has Charles Addams most generously contributed this cartoon, but he has honored us also by selecting one of each of the two men and women receiving the most senior class votes under these categories: leadership, scholarship, service, personality, talent, and versatility.

In this selection, Mr. Addams promises us he is not being sadistic, nor must we drape the women in pencil-like gowns disappearing into the floor or supply men with gaunt cheekbones or evil-looking mustaches.

The L'AGENDA extends its sincere thanks to Charles Addams who, we hope, after briefly stepping out of character for our benefit, will continue being as delightfully wicked as ever.

A magic word, a puff of smoke, a flip of the page—and we recall Bucknell's spirits of '53!

THE WORLD AT BUCKNELL

And every day it came to pass,
That four lusty meals made he,
And step by step, upon an ass,
Rode abroad, his realms to see.

Victor Hugo, The King of Yvetot

While the mouth and the brow stay brave in bronze
Admire and say, "When he was alive
How he would take his pleasure once!"

Robert Browning, The Statue and the Bust

Here is the Britain Row, the French Row, the Italian
Row, the Spanish Row, the German Row.

John Bunyan, The Pilgrim's Progress

Fair Nymphs, and well-dressed Youths around her shone,
But ev'ry eye was fixed on her alone.
Alexander Pope, The Rape of the Lock

The cricket is chirping, the brooklet near;
In the water a something stirs . . .
Heinrich Heine, Summer Evening Shadows

Let the cup be brought, if the poison is prepared.
If not, let the attendant prepare some.

Plato, The Phaedo

I never travel without books . . . and yet sometimes I pass over several days, and sometimes months, without looking at them.

Michael de Montaigne,
Of Intercourse With Books

Yes: 'tis a garret—let him know't who will—There was my bed—full hard it was and small.

Victor Hugo, The Garret

By thine own might and main Thou hast thyself achieved—that thy name shall live Forever unto ages.—May the All-Wielder give Reward of good unto thee,—as ever he hath done.

Beowulf

The apple that was not eaten, the grapes untasted
Let them be put away.
They served for us, I would not have them wasted . . .
Sara Teasdale, In a Darkening Garden

Thy dear little mouth doth show
Pearls within, a shining row.
Heinrich Heine,
Thou Art So Fair and Pure

I like to see it lap the miles,
And lick the valleys up.
Emily Dickinson,
I Like To See It Lap the Miles

Tribute of thanks as could not be effaced
Out of the chronicle of time gone by.
Dante Alighieri, Commedia

Let me know all! Prate not of most or least,
Painful or easy!
Even to the crumbs I'd fain eat up the feast,
Ah, not feel queasy.
Robert Browning,
A Grammarian's Funeral

... he did then eat only to restrain the gnawings of his stomach.
Rabelais, Gargantua and Pantagruel

The soul selects her own society,
Then shuts the door;
On her divine majority
Obtrude no more.

Emily Dickinson, The Soul Selects

None but the brave deserves the fair.

John Dryden, Alexander's Feast

The joys of parents are secret, and so are their griefs and fears, they cannot utter the one, nor they will not utter the other.

Francis Bacon, Of Parents and Children

In God's name let us falter not, nor countenance delay,
But sally forth and strike a blow upon tomorrow's day.

Poema de Mio Cid

One of the pleasantest things in the world is going a journey; but I like to go by myself . . . I like more elbowroom and fewer encumbrances.

William Hazlitt, On Going a Journey

Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp, or what's a heaven for?

Robert Browning, Andrea del Sarto

Knowing that Nature never did betray
The heart that loved her.

William Wordsworth, Tintern Abbey Ode

... love's all-worshipped tomb,
Where all love's pilgrims come.

William Blake,
True Love Doth Pass Away

Miniver cursed the commonplace
And eyed a khaki suit with loathing;

Edwin Arlington Robinson, Miniver Cheevy

Bucknell's Contribution to Medical Science

In eulogizing Bucknell from many points of view, there is no end and all points of view are a pleasure to all who have known and loved their Alma-mater. For in time past and on innumerable occasions we have been favorably disposed to laud Bucknell from whence flow blessings of culture and character and fond memories. And now a recent hospital experience reminds us of Bucknell's great contribution to medical science.

It has been our good fortune to know personally the great pioneers in this branch of Bucknell learning. We have also had the great pleasure of rummaging through the old dirt floors and dungeons and cobwebs of Old Main, where we unearthed and uncovered much obsolete equipment that attended our humble birth in chemistry and physics.

Even preceding our student days, Bucknell stood in seventh place among a hundred colleges doing pre-medical work. Numerous cadavers were seen in the dissecting rooms of the college and an occasional one hanging from a tree put there by students with a perverted sense of humor.

Bucknell still maintains its high standing among our leading Medical Colleges, whereby our students with the proper grades and recommendations assures himself of very favorable consideration, where the applicants are always far in excess of those who are accepted.

Space forbids naming more than a few professors, who have made Bucknell great in this medical sphere. We place Dr. George B. Groff and Dr. William Owens at the top of the list two men who were great pioneers in our biology and chemistry department. Dr. Groff, one time President of Bucknell and a great scientist honored by Teddy Roosevelt in his appointments. Billy Owens included among his many successful students, the chief chemist of duPonts and the builder of the great 200 inch telescope glass, at the Corning Glass Works. Dr. Groner was one of the great co-laborers of Dr. Owens, followed by Dr. Keift and Dr. Manning. In the medical laboratories of the old Academy, who like Christ prophesied of his followers greater works have been done by the present generation. We include in this group, Dr. Nelson Davis, Dr. Rice, Dr. Stewart and Dr. Tasker, all of whom have continued to maintain and exceed the high standards of their predecessors.

When modern hospital experiences becomes almost a happy occasion, with all its fine equipment, trained nurses and technicians and skilled surgeons and specialists of all kinds, all these ministering angels at your service, one has every assurance and satisfaction without any concern for his rapid return to health. We extend our gratitude to our Bucknell medical faculty for their share in a more healthful and sanitary world, where pain and sickness are on the losing side in the battle against medical competence.
